“The practice of medicine is an art, not a trade; a calling, not a business; a calling in which your heart will be exercised equally with your head.”

— Sir William Osler
In the presence of family, friends, teachers, and colleagues, and in the spirit of humanism and professionalism, I pledge to keep this oath.

First, I will do no harm.

I will honor those who taught me both the art and science of medicine.

I will remember with gratitude and humility those whose illnesses or injury provided examples from which I learned, and, in their honor, I will continue the pursuit of knowledge.

I will actively seek to expand my skills, keeping abreast of advances in medicine, and will share my knowledge with all who are in want or need of it.

I will practice with compassion and humility and will act with impartial and enduring respect for all my patients and for the dignity of human life.

I will hold sacred the trust of my patients and will respect that which they confide in me.

I will not be ashamed to say “I know not,” nor will I fail to call on my colleagues when the skills of another are needed for a patient’s recovery.

Finally, I will do all in my power to help my patients reach physical, mental, and spiritual health, and I will strive for this balance in my own life.

May I have the courage and character to hold these principles sacred from this day forward as I place myself into the service of humanity.

This oath I make solemnly, freely, and upon my honor.
